EDISON, NJ November 4, 2015—The ALS Group, independent third-party risk-management advisor to companies worldwide, is pleased to announce that it will be attending the 35th annual International Risk Management Institute (IRMI) Construction Risk Conference. By bringing some of its top team members to the event, The ALS Group will be able to keep abreast of the latest industry trends in construction risk management—one of the firm's specialties.

"While we spend every day on the front lines of construction risk management for our clients, we're also well aware of the value of attending industry conferences such as this one," notes The ALS Group Managing Principal Albert Sica. "We look forward to participating in various workshops, hearing from influential speakers, and networking with some of the 1,500 project owners, developers, and other insurance professionals who will be joining us there."

Construction risk management is a highly specialized field, given the panoply of disciplines it encompasses, including everything from site selection and feasibility studies to workplace-safety guidelines and review of project financials. Yet The ALS Group has earned an enviable reputation for its performance in this field, with projects ranging from transit tunnels to high-profile public/private partnership ("P3") projects. Indeed, it recently provided valuable assistance to prestigious New York-based developer L&L Holding Company with its recent historic transaction to build a $1.1 billion office tower on Park Avenue in midtown Manhattan—including the management of numerous risk-related provisions of securing the project’s $556 million construction loan.

The IRMI Construction Risk Conference will be held in Las Vegas, November 8-11, 2015.
